CHAPTER XXVII.

History of the Printing Department of the Government of Bombay.

Government Central Press, Bombay.

441. From about 1830 to 1871 all the Secretariat and headquarters printing work of Government was done at the branch presses attached to the various departments of the Secretariat, most of the miscellaneous work such as forms work, etc., being done at the Bombay Educational Society's press or other private presses. This procedure and state of things, however, did not meet the requirements of Government of those times and in October 1871, Government appointed a committee, the first of a long series of committees, to thoroughly look into the question and suggest a way which would tend to centralize the Government printing work on an economical systematic basis. The Committee after long deliberations recommended establishing a Central Press in place of the detached small printing units. Government accepted these recommendations and ordered the centralization of all printing including that of the Bombay Government Gazette at this new Government Central Press, Bombay. This press was then placed under an officer called, "Superintendent, Government Central Press" and was accommodated in the town barracks belonging to the military department. It took over the work formerly done by the Secretariat Branch presses, the Bombay Education Society's Press and other private presses. Each department of the Secretariat, however, retained for its urgent work a small press establishment of its own, consisting of two compositors, a proof reader and two press men and rollermen and those were also located in the town barracks alongside of the new Government Central Press. In the year 1873, when the new Secretariat building was completed all the Secretariat presses except the Public Works Department press, were consolidated into one press called the Secretariat press and housed in two rooms on the ground floor of the southern wing of the building. The establishment was strengthened from time to time in order to cope with the increase of work. The Secretariat Press establishment was under the supervision of the Superintendent, Government Central Press, from the beginning, and the press was treated as a part of the Government Central Press.

442. Before the introduction of the new system of printing the proceedings of the several departments of the Secretariat in the year 1898, the establishment of the Secretariat Press was considerably increased and in the year 1900, the total strength of that press rose to about 144. This press was maintained almost exclusively for the printing of Government resolutions, abstracts of proceedings, annual indexes, etc., for the different departments of the Secretariat. The new Government Central Press having been located at a distance of a few minutes walk from the Secretariat Press, it was suggested that the Secretariat Press should altogether be abolished and its work amalgamated with the Government

Central Press. This press was from its inception technically supervised by the Superintendent, Government Central Press, till about the year 1915-16, when at the recommendations of the sixth and the most important press committee appointed by Government in the year 1912, this press as well as the Public Works Department press were both finally placed completely under the control of the Superintendent, Government Central Press.

443. In the meantime, the town barracks building in which the Government Central Press was first located was required by the military department and as soon as the new Secretariat building was completed and occupied, Government ordered the Central Press to be shifted to the old Secretariat building duly modified to suit printing requirements. The move was made in March 1876 and the town barracks handed back to the military department. But as the state of the old Secretariat building was very unsatisfactory and its internal arrangements were quite unsuitable for a printing house, Government appointed a committee in the year 1881 to advise what should be done. The committee advised the improvement of the old building and the press remained where it was, till 1888. In the meantime the new building now occupied by the Elphinstone College was sanctioned and actually built for the press, but the printing press was never allowed to occupy it. As an alternative, the Central Press was shifted to the Hydraulic Press building, the old premises being sold by Government. This Hydraulic Press building was but a sorry substitute for the Elphinstone College building and, in spite of a large expenditure on repairs, remodelling and temporary additions from time to time, the provision of a satisfactory building for the Central Press remained a crying need.

444. In the year 1887, Government appointed another committee to advise whether the Central Press should be altogether abolished and all the printing and binding work of Government executed at this press transferred to private presses in Bombay. The detailed enquiries then conducted proved beyond doubt that private presses and firms were not in a position to economically undertake and execute the whole volume of work done at the Government Central Press. The proposal to abolish the Government Central Press was therefore abandoned.

445. In 1906, a fourth committee was appointed by Government to consider and report upon the following among other matters:—

(i) The saving which would result from the transfer of stock forms from the Central Press to the Yeravda Prison Press;

(ii) The transfer of the Central Press to Yeravda and also the transfer of a considerable part of the work to private presses.

Government issued orders on this report in 1907 and among other things, sanctioned the gradual transfer of stock forms to the Yeravda Prison Press.

446. In the year 1909, yet another (the fifth) Committee was appointed to consider the amalgamation of the Central Press with the Yeravda

Prison Press. The Committee recommended amalgamation as financially advantageous. The question, however, involved diverse aspects such as additional buildings at Yeravda, disposal of the buildings at Bombay, arrangements for the transfer, etc., and Government in passing orders on the committee's report called for some additional information on these points. Final orders were not passed till the sixth and the most important of all the press committees had reported in 1912. Government then decided that the scheme for the removal of the Central Press from Bombay to Yeravda and its amalgamation with the Yeravda Prison Press should be abandoned and that plans and estimates should be expeditiously prepared for a new Central Press at Bombay. The committee was appointed with a view to draw up a scheme indicating the exact nature and scope of the requirements of the new Government Central Press to be built in Bombay and incidentally to look into the distribution of the two presses on certain accepted principles. Mr. Cogswell, Controller of Printing and Stationery, who was then on his visit to Poona, was consulted by the committee. The committee's proposals and orders issued by Government and action taken by them are shown below side by side :—

Committee's Proposals.	Orders issued.	Action taken.
1. All book work and other printing work of a non-urgent character should be transferred from Bombay to a new non-Jail Press to be erected near the Yeravda Prison Press at a cost of Rs. 75,000.	The proposal was approved and plans and estimates called for, the item being provided for in the budget.	The new non-Jail press was not erected but the non-urgent work was transferred to the Yeravda Prison Press.
2. The Central Press building should be electrified and improved at a cost of Rs. 60,000 so as to accommodate all the Government Presses then existing in Bombay, viz. the Central Press, the Secretariat Press, the Public Works Department Press and the High Court Press, the last two ceasing to exist as separate presses.	This was also approved but in reference to the wishes of the High Court, its press was retained. Plans and estimates for the improvement and electrification of the Central Press building were also called for.	Part of the Central Press building collapsed later on and a temporary building on the Kennedy sea-face was sanctioned by Government in 1914.

Committee's Proposals.	Orders issued.	Action taken.
3. The appointment of Superintendent, Government Central Press, should be abolished and a new appointment of Superintendent, Government Printing should be created. The new officer should have control of the Central Press in Bombay as reconstituted and of the new press at Yeravda, and exercise in addition to these duties and subject, if necessary, to the orders of the Commissioner in Sind and Agent to the Governor, Kathiawar, respectively, general supervision over the Commissioner's Printing Press, Karachi, and the Agency Press, at Rajkot.	Approved subject to the sanction of the Government of India to the creation of the appointment. The Superintendent, Government Printing, should control the free press at Yeravda, the Government Central Press as reconstituted and also the High Court Press. Government left it to the Superintendent to decide about the transfer of suitable urgent work to Yeravda and similar work from the High Court to the Central Press at Bombay so that the work to be done at the High Court Press might be reduced to a minimum. The supervision of the presses at Karachi and Rajkot was left subject to the orders of the Commissioner in Sind and Agent to the Governor in Kathiawar, respectively.	Carried out (except as regards the new press at Yeravda).
4. The Superintendent, Government Printing, should have control of all arrangements for supplying paper to Government presses.	Approved subject to the purchasing of country paper through the Stationery Office as before during the contract period ending 1918.	Carried out.
5. The posts of Superintendent, Photozincographic department and certain other minor appointments at the press in Poona belonging to that department should be abolished and the press itself placed under the charge of the Superintendent, Government Printing. 6. All form-printing work done at the press of the Photozincographic department should be transferred to Yeravda Prison Press.	(5) and (6) The Photozincographic Press was to be administratively subordinate to the Settlement Commissioner and commercially subordinate to the Superintendent, Government Printing. Form printing and other type work were to be transferred to Yeravda Prison Press subject to the approval of both the Settlement Commissioner and the Superintendent, Government Printing, doubtful cases being referred to Government, if in any case, the two officers did not agree. The Photozinco Press should not ordinarily undertake work for Indian States and semi-official bodies in competition with private presses. Only private work of a highly specialised character which is beyond the capacity of local private presses might be undertaken.	Carried out.

Committee's Proposals.	Orders issued.	Action taken.
7. The Government Book Depôt should be transferred to Poona.	Approved as accommodation became available there.	Carried out.
8. A special officer should be appointed to standardize forms, which should then be transferred to Yeravda Prison Press.	Approved ..	First Mr. F. S. Jehangir and latterly Mr. P. R. Kapadia were placed on special duty in connection with the standardization of forms transferred to Yeravda Press.

447. Government thus modified the committee's recommendations in respect of the High Court Press and the Photozincographic Press and so to some extent reduced the financial benefits of the proposed scheme. But the measures approved were estimated to yield an annual saving of Rs. 30,000 and a considerable increase in efficiency of work. The post of the Superintendent, Government Printing, with headquarters at Poona was created with the approval of the Government of India and the printing department was put under his control in 1914. The superintendent was given, in addition to supervision over the different presses in the Province, charge of the supply of paper to the Government presses and to the Stationery office. He was also entrusted with the examination of the expenditure of officers throughout the Province on printing at private presses and on stationery with a view to checking the tendency of officers to buy from private presses forms and envelopes for which standard articles were available and with the duty of seeing that in cases where the employment of private presses was really needed, the rates charged were reasonable. The strict performance of this important duty has saved Government large sums of money every year.

448. The temporary building on the Kennedy Sea-face, which was sanctioned for the Central Press as an emergency measure while the hydraulic press building was being remodelled and overhauled after its collapse, was occupied in 1914. The remodelling and repairing of the hydraulic press building was held up on account of the out-break of war and the Central Press had to remain in the temporary building on the Kennedy Sea-face until 1927. The war also prevented the new non-jail press being built at Yeravda. During the next few years, progress was, however, made and the Public Works Department Press was abolished and the Secretariat Press was amalgamated with the Government Central Press. The non-urgent work was transferred to Yeravda Prison Press and the Book Depôt was also moved to Poona.

Finally Government decided to build a new Central Press at Bombay at Charni Road. The building was completed and occupied by the press in 1927. Thereafter the department was centralised and reorganised, all special forms and non-urgent book work which had been transferred to Yeravda Press was partly brought back and the necessary readjustments were made in the establishments at Bombay and the Yeravda Presses.

The headquarters of the Superintendent, Government Printing and Stationery, were also transferred to Bombay in the year 1925.

Mechanical development of the press.

449. In the year 1913, a small beginning was made with mechanical composition at Bombay by the purchase of a monotype machine for the Government Central Press. This section of the press proved to be very useful and was developed from time to time. The section at present consists of 14 monotype casters, 15 key-boards and 6 linotypes.

450. In 1916, following the example of the Government of Madras who had established a rubber stamp section in their press in 1913 and after deputing the Superintendent, Government Printing, to Madras to study the subject, Government sanctioned the establishment and plant required for the manufacture of rubber stamps at the Government Central Press. The new arrangement has proved very economical compared with the previous system of purchase by annual contracts followed by the stationery office.

451. In 1919, owing to paucity of labour at that time, a Multigraph section was introduced in the Central Press with six compotypes and a multigraph printer, worked by female labour. This section was grouped with the mono-operating section, which was also managed by female labour, and both together placed under the supervision of one forewoman. The multigraph section was, however, abolished from 1st March 1932 as being no longer necessary.

452. The Lithographic section of the Government Central Press which was established in 1882 was also closed down with effect from 1st of April 1930 and all cartographical work was transferred to the Government Photozincographic Press, at Poona.

453. The work of the printing department of the Bombay Government mainly consists of—
